HISTORICAL SKETCH.

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY was founded in that period of the nineteenth century that was rendered distinctive by the development of the conception of the importance of the individual. The spirit of the time was reflected in the minds of a group of men in the city of New York who conceived the idea of a University that should serve the people, that should provide needful training for engineers, architects, teachers and business men, as well as for the learned professions, and that should be universal in its scope. Such was the plan of the founders of New York University, contemplating a College, Engineering School, School of Law, School of Medicine, a school for the training of teachers, and a department of Graduate Study. It was a protest against the then existing educational institutions, a move toward a new system of education. They were far ahead of their time in their educational views, so far indeed that it remained for the last quarter of the century to see the full consummation of their plans.

The earliests record of the conception of New York University exists in the minutes of certain meetings of nine citizens of New York. The first meeting was held on December 16, 1829, and was followed by others held more or less frequently throughout that month and January, 1830. A call for a representative conference of citizens, for the purpose of considering the establishment of a university on a liberal and extensive foundation, was sent out by these citizens for January 8, 1830. At this meeting a standing committee of nine members was appointed, for the purpose of securing shareholders and of launching the new enterprise. The work proceeded steadily, and on October 15, 1830, a council was chosen by the shareholders from their number. This Council included among others the following well-known names: Rev. James M. Mathews, General Morgan Lewis, Hon. James Tallmadge, Hon. Albert Gallatin, Valentine Mott, M.D., Edward Delafield, M.D., Myndert Van Schaick.

Meanwhile, the Committee had appointed a sub-committee to invite men of eminence in higher education to attend an educational convention in New York, October 20-23, 1830. This was not only for the purpose of obtaining the benefit of the views of educational experts in the establishment of the proposed university, but also for the purpose of promoting the common cause of education throughout the nation. The meetings of this convocation were held in the Common Council Chamber of the City, and representatives of a dozen different American institutions of higher education were present. Many themes of educational importance were discussed, including the reasons for the supremacy of European universities, the different conditions existing in the United States and in Europe, the proper curriculum for a college, the question of graduate study and of a school for the training of teachers.

The University Charter was secured April 21, 1831. Although the original plan had contemplated six separate schools, it was found impossible to launch all these divisions at this time, and the work began with instruction simply in the College, with special courses in Mathematics and Physical Science for those who wished to become trained in engineering. The first sessions were held in the fall of 1832 at Clinton Hall, on the southwest corner of Nassau and Beekman Streets. One hundred and fifty-seven students were enrolled during the first year, and there were eighteen professors on the faculty roll.

A new site was acquired at Washington Square in 1833, and the cornerstone of the University Building was laid July 16th of that year. Work on the new building was interrupted, however, and it was not opened for classes until 1835, and was not dedicated until May 20, 1837. It was in this building, in the fall of 1835, that Prof. Samuel F. B. Morse invented the recording telegraph. It was here, too, that in 1839 Dr. John W. Draper perfected Daguerre's system of photography and took the first picture of the human countenance ever made, and it was on the roof of this building that in 1839 Professors Draper and Morse opened the first photograph gallery in the world. Of the graduates of the University during these first years, it is said that more than half entered the ministry and a quarter entered the law, which shows that the University itself had not avoided the criticism which had been made of other institutions by its founders—i. e., that they served almost exclusively the learned professions.

In 1835, Hon. Benjamin F. Butler, Attorney-General in Jackson's Cabinet, at the request of the University Council, published a plan for the organization of a law faculty and for a system of instruction in legal science. This plan provided for a three-year course of study and was adopted by the Council in 1838, and Butler was elected as the Principal of the Faculty, with William Kent and David Graham, Jr., as Professors. The scheme of legal study was new to New York, and was opposed by many members of the bar, who thought that the only way in which a knowledge of the law could be gained was by study in an attorney's office. There were no more than fifteen or twenty students in the department during the first year, and when Butler was appointed United States District Attorney by Van Buren in 1839, the instruction lapsed.

Provision had been made in the original plan for a medical college, but no beginning was made until the winter of 1838-9, at which time the Council decided upon a plan for the school and chose the proposed professors. It was not until 1841, however, that the Faculty was definitely elected and work begun The most noted men of the new Medical Faculty were Dr. Valentine Mott, the foremost surgeon of the day, and Dr. John W. Draper—Professor of Chemistry, who had served as the head of this department in the College since 1839. The Medical School established headquarters at the Stuyvesant Institute at 659 Broadway, on the site of the present Broadway Central Hotel. The School was semi-proprietary in nature, the fees being given to the professors, the University granting the diploma and receiving simply the graduation fee. This School was successful from the start. During the first year, 239 students from 27 States and foreign countries were enrolled, and by 1850 there were more than 400 students on the rolls. The graduates of the School enjoyed many privileges both in this country and abroad, on account of the distinguished character of the members of the Faculty. In 1851 the Medical Faculty sold the Stuyvesant Institute and bought a lot on Fourteenth Street, the site of the present Tammany Hall, erecting a new building for the use of the School. This building was used until the Spring of 1866, at which time it was destroyed by fire. The Medical College took up temporary headquarters in the New York Hospital, and in 1869, having decided to remove to the vicinity of Bellevue Hospital, rented a building on East Twenty-sixth Street. Property on Twenty-sixth Street, east of First Avenue, was acquired soon after, and a building was erected in 1876. The faculty of the Medical College made a great contribution to the cause of Medical Science and humanity by securing the passage by the State Legislature in 1853 of the Act legalizing dissection. Prior to this act it had been a felony to dissect a dead body, and consequently little instruction in surgery had been given.

The University Council at its meeting on May 27, 1858, again took up the question of the School of Law, instruction in which had lapsed in 1839, and named certain Professors to give courses, allowing them to decide upon the schedule. This School, like the Medical College, was semi-proprietary. The beginnings of the Law Library were furnished by the generosity of John Taylor Johnston. Among the members of this first Faculty were Hon. Thomas W. Clerke—Judge of the Supreme Court, Hon. Levi S. Chatfield—late Attorney-General of the State of New York, and the Hon. Theodore H. Sedgwick—United States District Attorney. During the first year this School had an enrollment of 70 students. It did not increase rapidly in size, however, owing to the popular idea that a sound knowledge of legal principles could be obtained only through study in an attorney's office.

For the first half century of the history of the University these three Schools —the College, the Law School and the School of Medicine—were the only ones to be developed, and of these, two, the Law School and the School of Medicine, were semi-proprietary and only nominally under the control of the University Council. The college, never numbering more than 200 students in any one year, was the university so far as actual control over students, definition of requirements and election of professors by the University Council was concerned.

The movement for the acquisition of University Heights, the present home of the College, was begun by Dr. Henry M. MacCracken in 1890. In a report rendered by him as Vice-Chancellor to the Council, in November of that year, he called attention to the limitations of the College at its downtown site. At the time he contemplated the acquisition of a small tract of five or six acres in the uptown section of the city. During the winter of 1890-91 he devoted himself assiduously to this task, and as he worked became more and more convinced of the feasibility of the plan. A meeting was held on February 26, 1891, at the residence of Mrs. R. L. Stewart, 871 Fifth Avenue, for the purpose of creating interest in the movement, and from this time on the movement gained headway. On July 1, 1891, only three weeks after Dr. MacCracken took office as Chancellor, the University secured an option on the Mali estate, above East 179th Street. Numerous citizens contributed generously, and by May of 1892, $200,000 had been promised for this purpose, and twenty acres of the property was purchased. The Ohio Society of New York City appointed a committee to assist the Chancellor in securing funds for an athletic field, and their efforts brought about the establishment of Ohio Field.

Work was immediately begun at the new site in fitting it for the use of the College. The construction of Language Hall and of the Havemeyer Laboratory was carried on during the winter of 1893-94. A large brick mansion, which was located on the property, was named Butler Hall, in honor of Charles Butler, who had been a member of the University Council for more than fifty years, and was fitted up as a dormitory, the first college dormitory within the limits of New York City. Several wooden pavilions were united for the use of the biological laboratories. With the financial assistance of the late David Banks, two large wooden buildings which were on the property were joined together and fitted up for a Gymnasium. Founders' Day was observed at University Heights on April 18, 1894, the class of '94 carrying a stone from the University Building at Washington Square, and laying it as the cornerstone of the Gymnasium. The College work was transferred to University Heights in the fall of 1894, and contrary to the expectations of many, the number of students was even greater than in the preceding year at Washington Square. At the same time as the moving of the College to its new site, a change of great importance was made in the system of study. This was the adoption of the elective group system after the Freshman year, which at that time had been adopted by few colleges. In May, 1895, came the gift of the Memorial Library, the best known building at University Heights. Excavations for this building were begun in the summer of 1896, and on December 5, 1899, the Auditorium was opened for the use of students and instructors. The official opening of University Heights was held October 19, 1895. Gould Hall—the present dormitory—was opened in 1896.

In March, 1900, the University received a gift for the establishment of the Hall of Fame for great Americans. This gift made possible the building up of University Heights in such a way as to render it architecturally beautiful, and also provided much needed class-rooms in the Museum. In 1906 came the gift of the Schwab estate, rounding out the University Campus to more than forty acres and adding two fine residence halls, South Hall and West Hall, to the buildings of the University. The Kennedy bequest which came in 1910 made possible the extinguishment of the mortgage on University Heights, and gave the University its own Campus free and clear of all indebtedness.

When the College was moved to University Heights in 1894 the old building at Washington Square was torn down, and a modern, eleven-story building was erected on its site. The first eight floors of this building were rented to a book publishing company, and the ninth, tenth and eleventh floors were reserved for the use of the Law School and the then new School of Pedagogy.

The problem of the reorganization of the existing schools on a true University basis was carried on at the same time as the movement for the acquisition of the new site. The first School to be reorganized was the College. The College had always given special courses in Mathematics and Science to those who wished instruction in Engineering. In 1886 these courses were supplemented and their instructors organized as the Faculty of the School of Engineering. Little could be done in engineering work in the cramped quarters at Washington Square. With the removal to University Heights in 1894 and the gain in room, the School grew in vigor and life, even though it had no permanent building except Havemeyer Laboratory and a wooden building which was fitted up for engineering purposes. In 1899 came new endowments for the teaching of Applied Science, and the Department of Engineering became the School of Applied Science.

In 1886 the Graduate School was opened at Washington Square. This School had been originally named in the plan of the Founders, and graduate degrees had been given for work taken in advanced Chemistry courses given by Prof. John C. Draper. In 1886 a statute was adopted by the University, forbidding the bestowal of the degrees of M. A., M.S., Ph.D. and Sc.D., except upon examination. Courses were begun in the fall of 1886 and were given by the professors of the University College. There was no endowment for this work, and as the classes were at first very small, the professors gave their time to the work with little or no remuneration. A high grade of students, many of them departmental teachers in the city high schools, were attracted to this School from the very first.

In 1889 the Law School was taken directly under the control of the University Council, and a Dean appointed. Austin Abbott was made Dean in 1891, and under his great leadership the School was soon raised to a high standard. The number of professors was increased and a department of Graduate study was founded. The growth of this School was one of the reasons urged for the transfer of the College to University Heights. In 1895 the Metropolis Law School was merged with the University Law Schools as the Evening Division, the professors of the Metropolis becoming professors in the evening division of the University Law School. The enrollment in this school for the first year after the consolidation was 527. A three-year course was given in the evening division and a two-year course in the day division.

The School of Pedagogy was founded in 1890. For three years previous to this date many graduates of normal schools, who were not eligible to membership in the Graduate School had applied for permission to take the course in Pedagogy offered in that School. They were allowed to attend as auditors or non-matriculants, but were not given credit for their work toward any degree. Many of them were high grade teachers and all of them were good students. It was resolved to extend this work, and to form a distinct school, giving the degrees of Master of Pedagogy, and Doctor of Pedagogy. This was the first School of Pedagogy ever established occupying the same plane as professional schools of Law, Medicine and Theology. An endowment was raised for the purposes of this School, and the ninth floor of the University Building at Washington Square was turned over for its use.

The Women's Advisory Committee was organized in connection with the founding of the School of Pedagogy. As soon as it was seen that women would come in large numbers to attend this new school, the Council decided to secure the co-operation of a body of representative women interested in University education for women. This Committee has done splendid service for the School, aiding in its equipment, the raising of the endowment, the furnishing of the rooms and in the establishment of new professional courses.

The Medical College existed as a proprietary school until 1897. The ownership of the School lay in several physicians who ran it as a business venture. The requirement by the Regents of a three-year course in medicine in 1892 made the venture of the proprietors less profitable. There were disputes among the several proprietors, and the instruction was not kept up to university standards. On March 1, 1897, upon the recommendation of its Committee on the Medical College, the University assumed direct charge of the college and took over its property. A disastrous fire which took place on the property of the Bellevue Hospital Medical College at this time led the trustees of that institution to make a favorable reply to the proposition of the University Council to consolidate. This consolidation was effected on May 19, 1898, and the new institution was called the University and Bellevue Hospital Medical College.

On August 7, 1899, the University consolidated with itself the two oldest colleges of veterinary science in the city, under the name of the New York-American Veterinary College.

The School of Commerce, Accounts and Finance was founded in August 1900. It was the result of a general movement in Europe and the United States in behalf of higher commercial education. The direct cause of the foundation of this School was the action of the State Society of Certified Public Accountants, in applying to the University for the establishment of a School of Accountancy. Accountancy had been raised to the standard of a profession by the Certified Public Accountants' Act of 1896, requiring an examination in the theory of accounting in addition to practical work. It was for the purpose of training young men to meet this standard that the Society petitioned the University Council for the establishment of the School. To meet this need and also to provide strong training in Economics and Business Administration for business men the Council established the School of Commerce, Accounts and Finance.

In addition to the reorganization of the two professional schools and the establishment of the five new schools, two other divisions of instruction were opened during Chancellor MacCracken's administration: (1) The Woman's Law Class was organized by the University in 1889 to give a course of lectures on the principles of Law for business women who did not have time to take the regular course of the Law School. (2) The Summer School was opened in 1895 at University Heights, and has continued at that location to the present day. The opening of this School was due to two facts; first, the desire of teachers in New York City and the vicinity to obtain courses in Education and in Collegiate Subjects during the summer; second, the belief that it would not be just to close such an academic plant as that at University Heights during the summer when there was a call for the instruction that might be given there.

Dr. Elmer Ellsworth Brown was elected in 1911 to succeed Chancellor MacCracken after the latter's resignation upon his seventieth birthday in 1910. During the administration of Chancellor Brown the Collegiate Division which had previously been organized for the purpose of giving students at Washington Square training in collegiate subjects was in 1913 developed into a separate degree-giving college called Washington Square College. This college now offers a course of study leading to the baccalaureate degree which combines both the academic subjects of the orthodox college with a liberal provision for vocational training.

Another important step taken in this period was the establishment, by legislative enactment, of the New York State Veterinary College at New York University. The Veterinary College is now authorized to offer free scholarships to students from the various assembly and senatorial districts of the state of New York.

A separate department for the training of teachers of mental defectives has been established with the co-operation of the Women's Advisory Committee and the Faculty of the School of Pedagogy. Other fields of special teaching are being developed under the same auspices. The Division for Extramural Teaching has been constantly extending its field of activity and has now developed several permanent and prosperous centres of work.

In 1914 the Cornelius Baker Hall of Philosophy was completed, forming the northern part of the well known library group at University Heights. The building of this structure was made possible by the generosity of Mrs. Kennedy.

In the last few years the University has developed remarkable numerical strength in all its branches. Student registration from 1912 to 1915 has increased 57% and this rate of increase has been maintained consistently among the various schools and divisions of the University.

New York University is unquestionably entering upon a new era—an era of unprecedented expansion and vigorous growth. The success of its work will be measured not only by its size but by the character of the men it trains, by their devotion to the highest ideals of the University while they are within its walls and by their loyalty and unstinted support when they have gone forth as alumni. The chief work of the University is the making of men and women and the character of the alumni body is the measure of the success of the University in this work.

THE COUNCIL OF THE UNIVERSITY

The Council of New York University, incorporated the 18th of April, 1831, is a self-perpetuating body, consisting of thirty-two members, each holding office for four years or until his successor is elected. One-fourth of the members go out of office each year on the fourth Monday of October, when their successors are elected by the council.

wid.—widows.

The name of the institution by which it has been conferred follows the academic degree. The omission of it indicates that the degree was given by New York University.

Numerals (1), (2), (3), (4) after college honors and officers indicate fresh., soph., jun: and senior years, respectively.

A star (*) after a name denotes that the individual is deceased. In every case in which the year of the deceased is known it is indicated at the right.

When an address appears in parenthesis it denotes that it is the last known address.

In case of an alumnus who holds more than one degree from New York University, the full record and address are given only under the school from which he was first graduated, the name only being given in the records of subsequent degrees.

In the case of married women graduates, the name under which the degree was received is given first, with the married name immediately following in parenthesis.
